Panaji: A political storm has erupted over the future of Dabolim Airport, with the Goa Forward Party (GFP) threatening a statewide agitation if Chief Minister Pramod Sawant and Minister Mauvin Godinho fail to clarify their stand by next week. GFP chief Vijai Sardesai launched a sharp attack on Godinho, terming it “shameful” to suggest that private airport operator GMR is pressurising the Centre to “kill” Dabolim. Sardesai said. He further claimed that the Union Defence Minister had warned Godinho against speaking further on the issue and alleged that the Indian Navy intends to take over the airport entirely. “I had raised this issue in the Assembly on January 16. A prominent businessman informed me that GMR and an Admiral have moved a file noting to keep Dabolim exclusively for the Navy post ‘Operation Sindoor’,” Sardesai stated. Calling Dabolim “Goa’s symbolic airport,” the GFP chief demanded that the Chief Minister and Godinho publicly spell out their position. “If they fail to clarify by next week, we will launch a statewide agitation,” he warned. Leader of Opposition Yuri Alemao echoed concerns, saying apprehensions about Dabolim’s future appear to be coming true. He questioned why no firm assurance has been issued by the Defence Minister regarding the continuation of civil operations. Alemao alleged that Godinho has merely repeated earlier statements and urged Goans to remain alert. “Something is fishy

Another Acquittal, Another Question for Goa's Politics

The acquittal of Goa Revenue Minister Atanasio "Babush" Monserrate in a 2016 rape case may have settled a legal battle, but it has reopened a deeper political and moral debate. In a state where personalities often overshadow principles, the verdict is less about one man's relief and more about what repeated controversies mean for public trust.

A North Goa sessions court cleared Monserrate and a co-accused of all charges, including rape and offences under the POCSO Act, citing serious gaps in the prosecution's case. The court said essential facts were missing. Sexual assault could not be proved, the complainant's age was not conclusively established, and her testimony contained multiple inconsistencies. Under criminal law, where guilt must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt, the benefit went to the accused.

From a legal standpoint, the judgment follows established principles. Courts cannot convict on suspicion or sentiment. But public life is not governed by legal thresholds alone. It is shaped by accountability, ethical standards, and the confidence citizens place in those who govern them.

This case lingered for nearly a decade. During that time, Monserrate remained an influential political figure, changing parties, holding office, and consolidating his position in Panaji. The long delay itself is a problem. Justice delayed is not merely inconvenient; it corrodes faith in institutions. When serious allegations take years to resolve, the process becomes the punishment for some and an advantage for others.

The judgment also exposes a chronic weakness in India's criminal justice system. Cases of sexual violence often fail not because nothing happened, but because investigations are sloppy and prosecutions

Monserrate has called the verdict vindication. Legally, he is entitled to do so. Politically, however, the question remains unresolved. Should public life demand only legal innocence, or should it also insist on moral responsibility? Political parties routinely hide behind court verdicts to avoid uncomfortable conversations. Acquittal becomes not just a legal end, but an ethical escape.

This approach lowers the bar for leadership. Democracy is not strengthened when leaders survive controversy without reflection. It is weakened when accountability is reduced to what can be proven in court, years after the fact, amid investigative failures.

lack depth. In this case, the inability to firmly establish age under the POCSO Act proved fatal. Medical evidence did not support the allegations. Statements changed over time. These are not minor procedural issues. They are foundational failures.

Such lapses hurt everyone. They leave the accused under a cloud for years and deny complainants a credible chance at justice. When the state cannot investigate serious crimes with care and competence, the courtroom becomes a stage for uncertainty rather than truth.

For survivors of sexual violence, particularly those accusing powerful men, verdicts like this reinforce a sense of futility. Reporting itself is arduous. Trials are slow. Outcomes often hinge on technicalities. Each acquittal in a high-profile case deepens the belief that influence, time, and resources tilt the scales.

Monserrate has called the verdict vindication. Legally, he is entitled to do so. Politically, however, the question remains unresolved. Should public life demand only legal innocence, or should it also insist on moral responsibility? Political parties routinely hide behind court verdicts to avoid uncomfortable conversations. Acquittal becomes not just a legal end, but an ethical escape.

This approach lowers the bar for leadership. Democracy is not strengthened when leaders survive controversy without reflection. It is weakened when accountability is reduced to what can be proven in court, years after the fact, amid investigative failures.

The timing of the verdict, ahead of civic and assembly elections, adds another layer of unease. While courts do not operate on electoral calendars, politics certainly does. An acquittal at such a moment bolsters political confidence and quietens criticism, regardless of the broader questions it leaves unanswered.

The judiciary has done what it could with the evidence before it. The larger failure lies elsewhere: in policing, prosecution, and political culture. Until investigations are timely and professional, trials swift, and parties willing to draw ethical red lines, such outcomes will continue to shadow public life.

As Goa approaches the polls, voters are not merely choosing representatives. They are choosing the standards they are willing to accept. Courts decide guilt. Citizens must decide credibility.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

When Grief Meets Alleged Misconduct in Uniform

By Suraj Nandrekar

The recent registration of a case against a police constable in Anjuna for allegedly stealing gold ornaments from a man who died in a road accident is deeply disturbing, not only for the family involved but for the wider public that depends on the police in moments of crisis. According to the complaint, Police Constable Saish Parsekar, who was driving a police jeep and present at the accident site, is accused of stealing gold jewellery worth ₹7 to ₹8 lakh from 27-year-old Juster Rodriguez, who succumbed to injuries after his car met with an accident in the early hours of January 25. The family alleges that a gold bracelet, earrings, and a ring worn by the deceased went missing, and were never handed over during the official panchanama. What makes this case especially troubling is the context. This was not a routine interaction between a citizen and the police. It followed a fatal accident, a moment of extreme vulnerability, shock, and grief. In such circumstances, families place absolute trust in the authorities to act with integrity, sensitivity, and professionalism. Any betrayal of that trust strikes at the moral core of policing. The allegation that a family member's phone call to the deceased was answered by the constable present at the scene raises serious questions that go beyond theft. It points to potential misuse of access and authority at a time when the deceased could no longer speak for himself, and his family was desperately seeking information. While the investigation is still underway and the accused is entitled to due process, the registration of a case itself highlights a worrying pattern. Across the country, there have been repeated instances where police personnel have been accused of misconduct at accident sites, hospitals, or during custodial procedures. These are spaces where oversight is minimal, and power imbalance is at its highest. The police uniform represents authority backed by the state. With that authority comes responsibility. When even a small fraction of personnel are perceived to misuse their position for personal gain, it erodes public faith not just in individuals but in the institution as a whole. Law enforcement depends on cooperation and trust. Once that trust is damaged, it becomes far harder for the police to do their job effectively. For the Rodriguez family, the issue is not merely about missing jewellery. It is about dignity. The belongings of the deceased are often the last tangible connection families have with their loved ones. Losing them under questionable circumstances compounds grief with anger and helplessness. This case also exposes gaps in procedure. Clear protocols exist for documenting and safeguarding the personal belongings of accident victims. If these protocols were followed rigorously, allegations of this nature would be far less likely. The fact that jewellery allegedly worth several lakhs could go missing without immediate accountability suggests weaknesses in on-ground enforcement and supervision. It is not enough to register a case and wait for public attention to fade. The police department must ensure a transparent, time-bound investigation and communicate its findings clearly. Internal accountability mechanisms should be activated, and if wrongdoing is proven, consequences must be swift and visible. Silence or delay will only deepen suspicion. Equally important is the need for systemic reform. The use of body cameras, stricter documentation at accident scenes, and independent oversight in cases involving police misconduct are no longer optional. They are necessary to protect both citizens and honest officers who do their duty with integrity.

The police often ask the public to trust them during emergencies. That trust cannot be unconditional. It must be earned and renewed through accountability and ethical conduct. When allegations arise from moments of tragedy, the response must be firm, fair, and transparent. This case is a test. Not just of one investigation, but of the state's commitment to ensuring that those sworn to protect do not become a source of fear or injustice. The outcome will signal whether accountability is real or merely promised.

Molasses Tank Collapses During Dismantling, Toxic Waste Spill Sparks Public Outrage in Canacona

■ Shristhal residents confront officials, demand safe disposal plan as authorities seek action report from company.

Team Goemkarponn

Canacona: Disaster struck at Shristhal in Canacona after a highly corroded molasses tank partially collapsed during dismantling, releasing a large quantity of toxic waste into the open and triggering panic among residents. The incident occurred while workers were cutting a portion of the old tank. According to company supervisors, one large metal plate of the tank suddenly gave way, resulting in the toxic solvent overflowing into the surrounding area. The uncontrolled flow led to the formation of a large pool of waste, emitting an unbearable stench across the locality and causing irritation in the environment. Furious residents confronted Dy. Collector/SDO Prataprao Gaonkar, alleging unethical handling and discharge of toxic waste that they claim has contaminated nearby water bodies and endangered public health. Locals accused the authorities of being supportive of the company and risking the lives of people by allowing faulty dismantling and disposal practices.

Toxic Molasses Waste Enters Khalwadem Rivulet, Seepage Hits Vegetable Farms; Farmers Panic

Team Goemkarponn

Canacona: Panic gripped farmers at Khalwadem on Wednesday morning after toxic molasses waste allegedly entered the local rivulet, turning its waters reddish and seeping into nearby chilli and vegetable plantations. The contamination reportedly occurred after an iron plate of the controversial molasses tank at Shristhal Industrial Estate gave way during dismantling, allowing a large quantity of waste to flow into the open. The rivulet, which serves as a primary water source for cultivation in the area, flows about a kilometre behind the hillock where the defunct liquor factory's molasses-filled tank is located. Early in the morning, women working in their chilli (locally known as 'Porus') and vegetable fields noticed a change in the colour of the stream water. Soon after, they found that the contaminated water had entered parts of their cultivation fields. Several women farmers complained of irritation on their hands and legs after coming into contact with the polluted water.

Six Months After HC Closes PIL, Pollution Returns to Colva Creek

Team Goemkarponn

Colva: Half a year after the High Court disposed of a Public Interest Litigation concerning sewage discharge into Colva creek, residents claim the water body has once again deteriorated, with darkened water and floating garbage visible in several stretches. The PIL had been filed by the Colva Civic and Consumer Forum, which raised concerns over untreated sewage and effluents contaminating the creek. While disposing of the petition, the High Court had expressed satisfaction with the measures reportedly undertaken by the Goa State Pollution Control Board (GSPCB) to tackle waste disposal into the sea and specifically into Colva creek. Despite this, locals now question whether those corrective steps have been sustained. Residents are asking whether sewage inflow into the creek has truly been halted and whether routine maintenance and cleaning are being carried out. Concerns have also surfaced about whether all commercial establishments in the area have been connected to the Colva Sewage Treatment Plant by the Sewerage Infrastructure Development Corporation of Goa Ltd (SIDCGL), particularly when several businesses had earlier indicated their readiness to opt for connections. Judith Almeida, Secretary of the Colva Civic and Consumer Forum and the original petitioner, said she has not observed visible follow-up action from the Pollution Control Board, Tourism Department or other concerned authorities. She expressed concern over the creek's condition, stating that many visitors, including children, may be unaware that the water is contaminated.

Almeida has appealed to Chief Minister Pramod Sawant, who also handles the Environment portfolio, Tourism Minister Rohan Khaunte, and the Colva Village Panchayat to coordinate efforts to restore the creek. She warned that continued neglect could impact Colva's image as a tourist destination, particularly among international visitors. Activist Simon Rodrigues echoed similar concerns, asserting that meaningful improvement would only come once all commercial units are provided with functional sewage connections. He claimed that while businesses are willing to comply, there appears to be insufficient administrative follow-through. Rodrigues called for immediate intervention from the Tourism Minister and relevant officials to prevent further environmental damage.

Arunachal Hydropower Project Receives Environmental Nod After Three Decades

■ Kamala dam approval raises concern over loss of more than twenty three lakh trees.

New Delhi: A long pending hydropower project in Arunachal Pradesh has received a major regulatory push after the central expert panel recommended environmental clearance for the 1,720 megawatt Kamala dam. The decision comes nearly thirty years after the proposal was first conceived, but it has triggered serious concern due to the large scale ecological impact involved.

The project, proposed by NHPC Limited, involves construction of a massive concrete gravity dam on the Kamala River, a tributary of the Subansiri in the Brahmaputra basin. The structure is planned to rise to a height of 216 metres and the reservoir will spread across 3,858 hectares in Kamle, Kra Daadi and Kurung Kumey districts. Most of this region is covered by thick natural forests that support rich biodiversity. The expert appraisal committee, while recommending approval, highlighted that more than twenty three lakh trees would need to be felled for the project. The panel described this as a serious environmental challenge and stressed the need for strict mitigation measures. It asked for a detailed restoration and compensatory plan to be prepared in consultation with forest authorities, wildlife specialists and local communities before final forest clearance is granted.

The social impact is also expected to be significant. Official assessments indicate that 126 villages with around thirty thousand residents fall within the directly affected zone, while a broader study area covers 377 villages in four districts. Many of these communities depend on forests and rivers for their livelihood.

Supporters of the project argue that it will provide reliable electricity and help manage floods in the downstream Brahmaputra region. The dam is designed as a storage based facility with a special flood cushion to regulate excess monsoon water. Authorities believe it will strengthen energy security and contribute to economic development in the Northeast.

Initial studies for the project were carried out in 1996 and several designs were examined before the present site was finalised on technical and safety grounds. The estimated cost now stands at more than twenty three thousand crore rupees. Although the latest recommendation clears an important hurdle, the project still awaits final forest approval. Environmental groups and local residents are preparing to closely watch the next stage, as the decision will permanently reshape a vast stretch of Arunachal Pradesh's natural landscape.

Defence Council Set to Consider Purchase of 114 Rafale Fighter Jets

■ Major meeting chaired by Rajnath Singh expected to reshape India's air and maritime capabilities.

New Delhi: India's top defence decision making body is expected to take a crucial step toward strengthening the Indian Air Force by approving the acquisition of 114 additional Rafale fighter aircraft at its meeting on Thursday. The Defence Acquisition Council, headed by Defence Minister Rajnath Singh, will examine several proposals aimed at modernising the armed forces amid rising regional security challenges. The proposed purchase forms part of the Medium Role Fighter Aircraft programme and has already received clearance from the Defence Procurement Board. If the council grants approval, the plan will be forwarded to the Cabinet Committee on Security for final sanction. The deal, estimated at around three lakh twenty five thousand crore rupees, could become one of the largest military aviation contracts in the country's history.

Air force officials have repeatedly warned about the declining strength of combat squadrons. The service currently operates only 29 squadrons against an authorised requirement of 42, creating a serious capability gap. Even with the arrival of indigenous Tejas aircraft, experts believe additional fighters are essential to maintain operational readiness on multiple fronts.

The latest proposal places strong emphasis on domestic manufacturing and technology transfer. A significant portion of the aircraft is expected to be produced in India with integration of locally developed weapons and systems. The project is seen as a continuation of the earlier multi role combat aircraft competition that began in 2007 but could not be concluded because of prolonged negotiations. Apart from the Rafale decision, the council is also likely to review procurement of high altitude pseudo satellites, which are solar powered unmanned platforms designed for long duration surveillance. These systems, being developed by Indian research agencies, would provide persistent monitoring of border and maritime regions at a lower cost than conventional satellites.

The meeting may further discuss expansion of the navy's Boeing P 8I maritime patrol fleet, a key platform for anti submarine warfare and ocean surveillance.

The navy currently operates 12 such aircraft and has sought six more to strengthen its presence in the Indian Ocean.

Delays in the indigenous Tejas Mk1A programme have increased pressure on the government to fast track foreign acquisitions.

about the developments surrounding the airport," he remarked. Amid the growing controversy, South Goa Member of Parliament has written to Union Defence Minister Rajnath Singh seeking assurance on the continuity of Dabolim Airport as a civil enclave. However, Minister Mauvin Godinho and MLA Jit Arolkar have maintained that both Dabolim International Airport and Manohar International Airport at Mopa must function in coordination for the overall progress of the State. They have emphasized the importance of a dual-airport model to support Goa's tourism-driven economy. The escalating war of words has revived long-standing concerns over Dabolim's future, particularly in the backdrop of the operationalisation of Mopa airport and the strategic interests of the Navy, which controls Dabolim as a civil enclave.

■ American President Highlights Surge in Coal Exports and Growing Role as Global Energy Supplier.

Team Goemkarponn

New Delhi: United States President Donald Trump has praised the recent trade understanding with India, describing it as historic and beneficial for American energy exports. Speaking at a coal industry event in Washington, he said the agreement would significantly expand the sale of US coal to major international partners. The American leader declared that the United States has become the largest energy producer in the world and is rapidly transforming into a major exporter. He pointed to new commercial arrangements with India, Japan and South Korea as evidence of this shift, saying these deals would lead to a sharp rise in coal shipments from the country.

Trump also expressed confidence in the quality of American coal, stating that it is regarded as among the best available globally.

According to him, the growing demand from Asian economies would strengthen domestic mining communities and create new employment opportunities in the energy sector.

The remarks come at a time when India is reviewing its long term energy strategy to ensure stable and affordable supplies. New Delhi has repeatedly stated that its decisions in this sector are guided by national interest, reliable availability and fair pricing.

The development has further deepened the political confrontation that has disrupted the ongoing Budget Session. The nine second clip shared by the minister shows a group of Opposition MPs gathered around the desk of Lok Sabha Speaker Om Birla and speaking loudly. Birla is seen seated while BJP members stand quietly on one side. Rijiju alleged that about 20 to 25 Congress MPs had entered the chamber in an unlawful manner and created an atmosphere of intimidation.

Lavrov Dismisses Trump Remark on India Ending Russian Oil Imports

■ Russian Foreign Minister says no Indian leader has indicated any halt in energy purchases

New Delhi: Russia's Foreign Minister Sergei Lavrov has rejected a claim by United States President Donald Trump that India had agreed to stop buying crude oil from Russia. Speaking before Russian lawmakers, Lavrov said he had not heard such a statement from any Indian authority, including Prime Minister Narendra Modi or other senior leaders.

Lavrov stated that the suggestion of India abandoning Russian energy supplies did not match the reality of ongoing cooperation between the two countries. He emphasised that no official communication from New Delhi had indicated a change in its long standing policy of sourcing oil based on national requirements and market conditions. The Russian minister also referred to recent attempts by Washington to pressure several countries to reduce trade with Moscow. He said various economic measures, including tariffs and restrictions, were being used to influence independent energy decisions of strategic partners.

UN Report Flags Jaish-e-Mohammed Link to Red Fort Attack, Warns of New Women Terror Wing

■ Global Body Flags Link Between Terror Group and Red Fort Attack

New Delhi: A new United Nations assessment has raised serious concern over the activities of the Pakistan based terror organisation Jaish-e-Mohammed, pointing to its alleged involvement in a deadly attack at Delhi's historic Red Fort and warning about the creation of a separate women only unit to assist militant operations. The findings indicate that the group continues to adapt its methods despite years of international sanctions and security pressure. The counter terrorism monitoring team informed the UN Security Council that a member country had linked the organisation to the assault carried out on November 9 at the Red

Fort, an incident in which 15 people lost their lives. The site is regarded as a powerful symbol of Indian sovereignty and any attack on it is viewed as a major threat to national security. The report also highlighted that the group's leader Masood Azhar announced the formation of a new body called Jamaat ul Muminat on October 8.

Investigators stated that five police teams were formed to trace Mishra, who had remained untraceable since the accident on Sunday afternoon. The crash occurred on VIP Road when the Italian sports car, valued at over ten crore rupees, allegedly lost control and hit an e rickshaw, two wheelers and a parked motorcycle.

“Home Is Where You Get Peace”: Gambhir Reflects As India Tackle Selection Woes Before Namibia Clash

■ Injuries and illness test defending champions ahead of crucial T20 World Cup fixtures.

New Delhi: India head coach Gautam Gambhir has underlined the emotional value of playing in New Delhi as his side prepares to face Namibia at the Arun Jaitley Stadium. Calling home a place of peace and strength, Gambhir said returning to familiar surroundings provides balance in a demanding profession, particularly as India navigate fresh injury concerns during the T20 World Cup. The former opener shares a deep connection with the Delhi venue, having represented the city in domestic cricket, led the local IPL franchise and recorded his highest Test score there. He recently hosted the squad and support staff at his residence, strengthening team bonds before the group stage intensifies with a marquee clash against Pakistan in Colombo on February 15. However, India's preparations have been disrupted by fitness setbacks. Explosive opener Abhishek Sharma was hospitalised with a severe stomach ailment and, despite being discharged, remains doubtful for immediate selection. Sanju Samson is poised to step in at the top of the order. Further uncertainty surrounds Ishan Kishan, who picked up an injury during training, potentially prompting a reshuffle that could see Suryakumar Yadav or Tilak Varma promoted. India are also monitoring their bowling combination. The pace spearhead, who missed the previous game due to fever, is expected to return, which may force a difficult decision despite Mohammed Siraj's strong showing in the last match. With Delhi's surface traditionally assisting spin, there is growing consideration for Kuldeep Yadav's inclusion to add variety. All rounder Washington Sundar has recovered from a side strain and offers an additional bowling option along with batting depth, making him a viable alternative if the team opts for greater balance.

Deep Understanding of Data Is the Real Edge in Modern Chess, Says Anand

■ Five time World Champion highlights pattern recognition and intuition over memorisation

New Delhi: Five time World Champion Viswanathan Anand has said that in today's data driven chess environment, deep understanding rather than access to information is what truly sets players apart. Speaking at the opening of a three day chess workshop, Anand observed that the explosion of computer generated analysis has made it harder for players to meaningfully absorb knowledge. He noted that modern players are constantly exposed to new engine evaluations and fresh conclusions, making it impossible to internalise everything. According to him, the ability to interpret and deeply understand positions is now the defining quality of elite competitors. Drawing from his own experience of adapting to computer analysis years ago, Anand said openness to innovation is important, but genuine progress comes from grasping finer details. The Grandmaster also stressed that mastery in chess relies more on pattern recognition than rote memorisation.

“We Haven't Been Given A Night Session”: Erasmus Questions Training Schedule

■ Namibia captain voices concern ahead of floodlit clash against India at T20 World Cup

New Delhi: Namibia captain Gerhard Erasmus has raised concerns over the team's preparation ahead of their T20 World Cup encounter against India, revealing that his side was not allotted a single night training session before their floodlit match. Namibia are set to face India under lights on Thursday, but their build up has unfolded entirely during daytime hours. After playing a day fixture against the Netherlands earlier this week, their subsequent practice sessions were also conducted in daylight. In contrast, India reportedly trained twice in the evening to prepare for the conditions. Erasmus admitted he was unsure why Namibia were not granted a similar opportunity. He pointed out that other teams, including Canada, were seen training under lights at the same venue. Canada, who are scheduled to play an afternoon fixture against the UAE, also had access to a night session. The Namibia skipper highlighted the structural challenges his team faces back home, noting that the country lacks floodlit facilities for day night matches. As a result, many players have limited exposure to playing and training under artificial lights.

Anish Bhanwala Clinches Rapid-Fire Bronze as India Strengthens Lead at Asian Championship

■ India's medal tally rises to 41 gold as shooters deliver strong performances across senior and junior events.

New Delhi: World Championship silver medallist Anish Bhanwala secured a bronze medal in the men's 25 metre rapid fire pistol event at the Asian Shooting Championship, adding another podium finish to his growing list of achievements. The medal marked his third at the continental meet, even as Kazakhstan enjoyed a dominant outing with four gold medals on the eighth day of competition. India continued to lead the overall standings with an impressive haul of 41 gold, 19 silver and 15 bronze medals, with two days of events still remaining. Bhanwala and Adarsh Singh qualified for the rapid fire pistol final after finishing seventh and eighth with scores of 574 and 573 respectively. Kazakhstan's Nikita Chiryukin topped the qualification round with 582, leading a strong contingent from his country into the final.

In the eight series final, Bhanwala began confidently and stayed in contention through the early stages. After six series, he was tied for the lead with Japan's Dai Yoshioka and Chiryukin, each on 21 hits. However, a comparatively slower seventh series saw him slip behind, eventually finishing with 23 hits to claim bronze.

“We Are Helpless”: Bangladesh Players React After Minister's World Cup Remark

■ Confusion deepens as sports advisor's comments on T20 World Cup withdrawal spark frustration within team.

Team Goemkarponn

New Delhi: Bangladesh's absence from the T20 World Cup has taken a contentious turn after the country's sports advisor, Asif Nazrul, attributed the decision to the cricket board and players, prompting strong disappointment within the squad. Bangladesh were removed from the tournament by the International Cricket Council after declining to travel to India. Initially, it was widely believed that the government had made the decision on security grounds. However, Nazrul recently stated that the Bangladesh Cricket Board and the cricketers themselves were reluctant to participate, suggesting they had chosen to step aside in the interest of national safety. The remarks have unsettled several players, who maintain they were never consulted about any withdrawal and had been prepared to travel for the global event. Reports indicate that members of the squad were fully aware of the significance of the World Cup and the financial and professional consequences of missing it.
