Karapur protest against Abhinandan Lodha project suspended after 161 days

Panchayat's work-stoppage notice prompts temporary withdrawal; residents say opposition and legal proceedings will continue

Team Goemkarponn

KARAPUR: After 161 days of continuous agitation, residents of Karapur have decided to temporarily suspend their protest against the proposed 'One Goa' project of The House of Abhinandan Lodha.

The decision follows the Karapur-Sarvan Panchayat issuing a notice directing that work on the project be stopped. Residents said the panchayat's intervention has led them to pause the street protest, but stressed that it does not amount to withdrawing their opposition to the development.

The project has been at the centre of sustained resistance from sections of the local community, with residents raising objections over its proposed development in Karapur.

Announcing the decision, the protesters said their campaign would now shift its focus towards the legal avenues available to them. They maintained that proceedings challenging the project would continue and that they would closely monitor further developments.

The residents also made it clear that the 161-day protest should not be viewed as permanently concluded. They said they would consider resuming the agitation if circumstances required it or if work on the project proceeded despite the panchayat's notice.

The campaign artwork features a visual depicting a man and woman at a scenic coastal location, along with the logos of AAP and Goa Forward, to convey the parties' message of presenting an alternative to the two larger political formations.

AAP and GFP said the poster campaign would be taken across Goa as part of their effort to reach voters and highlight what they describe as repeated failures by successive Congress and BJP governments.

Will MGP stay with BJP in the coming elections?

The relationship between the Bharatiya Janata Party and the Maharashtra Gomantak Party is once again beginning to attract attention as Goa moves towards the 2027 Assembly elections. The question is simple but politically important: will the MGP remain with the BJP, or will growing ambitions over seats create friction within the NDA alliance?

The MGP currently has only two MLAs in the Goa Assembly, Sudin Dhavalikar from Madkai and Jit Arolkar from Mandrem. But the party clearly does not appear satisfied with retaining just these two constituencies. It wants to expand its footprint and is looking at several seats where it believes it can strengthen its position.

Among the constituencies reportedly on its radar are Sankhalim, the constituency of Chief Minister Pramod Sawant, besides Shiroda, Priol and Ponda. This is where the political equation becomes interesting.

For the MGP, demanding more seats is understandable. Every political party wants to grow. After remaining a relatively small partner in the alliance, the party would naturally want to bargain for a larger share of constituencies in 2027. But the BJP will also have its own calculations. It will not be easy for the party to surrender seats where it has strong organisational structures, sitting leaders or electoral ambitions of its own.

The situation becomes even more interesting when the Chief Minister himself publicly tells the MGP to remain within limits and not have excessive expectations. Such a statement cannot be ignored. It suggests that the two alliance partners may not be seeing the electoral map in exactly the same way.

This does not necessarily mean that the NDA is on the verge of breaking up. Politics is often about bargaining, positioning and sending messages before negotiations formally begin. Public statements can also be intended to keep alliance partners from making demands that could weaken the larger party's negotiating position.

“The BJP has several reasons to be cautious. The MGP has a long political history in Goa and still retains pockets of influence, particularly among sections of the electorate in certain constituencies. At the same time, the BJP is no longer in a position where it can take any constituency or alliance partner for granted. The 2027 election will involve local factors, candidates, anti-incumbency, opposition unity and constituency level calculations.

For the MGP, however, there is also a danger in pushing its demands too far.

The party has to decide whether its greater priority is expanding independently or remaining part of a coalition that has given it political relevance and ministerial space. If it demands too many seats that the BJP considers its own strongholds, negotiations could become difficult.”

Yet, the warning from the Chief Minister is significant because it comes at a time when the MGP appears keen to increase its bargaining power.

The BJP has several reasons to be cautious. The MGP has a long political history in Goa and still retains pockets of influence, particularly among sections of the electorate in certain constituencies. At the same time, the BJP is no longer in a position where it can take any constituency or alliance partner for granted. The 2027 election will involve local factors, candidates, anti-incumbency, opposition unity and constituency level calculations.

For the MGP, however, there is also a danger in pushing its demands too far.

The party has to decide whether its greater priority is expanding independently or remaining part of a coalition that has given it political relevance and ministerial space. If it demands too many seats that the BJP considers its own strongholds, negotiations could become difficult.

The most interesting constituency in this entire debate is perhaps Sankhalim. Asking for a seat represented by the Chief Minister himself would inevitably be seen as a serious political statement. Whether the MGP genuinely intends to contest there or is using the demand as a bargaining tool remains to be seen.

The same applies to Priol, Ponda and Shiroda. If the MGP insists on these constituencies, the BJP will have to determine whether accommodating its ally strengthens the NDA or creates dissatisfaction within its own organisation.

The coming months will therefore be crucial. What looks like a small disagreement over seat sharing could eventually become a larger question about the future of the alliance. The BJP and MGP have worked together before and have reasons to remain together. But alliances survive not merely because of past relationships. They survive when both partners believe they are getting a fair political deal.

The MGP wants more seats. The BJP wants control over its electoral territory. Both positions are understandable.

The real test will be whether the two parties can negotiate without allowing ambition to turn into confrontation. For now, the alliance may still be intact. But the message from the Chief Minister to the MGP is a reminder that the road to 2027 will not be without political bargaining. And if the MGP believes it deserves a bigger share of Goa's political pie, it will have to convince the BJP that its demands are not just expectations, but electoral realities.

If taxi meters were never used, why were they installed?

By Suraj Nandrekar

The government's decision to introduce QR codes in taxis so passengers can check notified fares may sound like a step towards transparency. But it also raises a rather uncomfortable question: what happened to the taxi meters that were supposed to provide exactly that transparency?

For years, taxi meters have been installed in Goa taxis. Passengers were expected to rely on them to know what they were being charged. Yet, in practice, meters were rarely used. Tourists and locals were routinely told the fare before starting the journey, and the meter often remained nothing more than a piece of equipment sitting on the dashboard.

Now we are being told that taxis will no longer use meters and that passengers will instead scan a QR code to check the government-notified fare.

So, were the meters simply a waste of money?

This is not merely a question about technology. It is about policy consistency and accountability. If meters were mandatory, why was their use not enforced? If the government has now concluded that a notified fare system is better, why was this decision not taken years ago?

The QR code proposal can certainly be useful. A passenger should know exactly what a taxi ride is supposed to cost. The proposed common digital platform could also bring some uniformity to the system, particularly if passengers can immediately check the applicable fare instead of negotiating with drivers.

But transparency cannot depend only on passengers scanning a QR code. The government must ensure that the fare displayed is actually the fare charged.

The proposed base fare of Rs 300 for the first three kilometres and Rs 445 for three to eight kilometres, depending on the vehicle category, followed by per kilometre charges, will need to be clearly notified and displayed. There must also be a simple mechanism for passengers to report overcharging.

The bigger issue is whether this is really a new solution or simply another attempt to deal with a problem that the authorities failed to solve earlier.

Taxi operators have opposed app-based platforms, arguing that they do not want to join such systems. The QR code proposal is being presented as a middle path. Fair enough. But the government cannot allow the interests of either passengers or operators to be compromised.

The passenger needs certainty. The driver needs a fair and predictable earning system. The government has to ensure that both are protected.

What Goa does not need is another half implemented system.

If meters were installed but never enforced, the government should have the courage to acknowledge that failure. If meters are now being abandoned, there should be a clear explanation about the decision and whether existing meters will simply become redundant.

For years, the taxi issue has remained one of Goa's most frustrating tourism and transport problems. Every few years, a new mechanism is announced, while the basic problem of predictable fares remains unresolved.

A QR code alone will not transform the taxi sector.

The real test will be enforcement.

If a passenger scans the code and sees a government-notified fare, but the driver demands something higher, what happens next? Who will act? How quickly can a complaint be resolved? Will there be penalties for repeated violations?

These are the questions that need answers.

Goa cannot keep buying equipment, introducing systems and then abandoning them without asking who failed to implement them.

If taxi meters were never going to be used, the public deserves to know why they were introduced in the first place.

And if QR codes are now the answer, let us hope they do not become the next expensive solution that exists on paper while passengers continue to negotiate their fares on the roadside.

Spread across 123 acres and built at a reported cost of around ₹2,700 crore, the facility was inaugurated in 2023 and has emerged as one of India's major venues for international events.

The name Bharat Mandapam draws inspiration from the 12th century Anubhava Mandapam, a historic forum associated with public discussion and dialogue. The complex also features a 27 foot tall Nataraja statue weighing 18 tonnes. Crafted by artisans from Tamil Nadu using ashtadhatu, the statue is among the venue's most prominent landmarks.

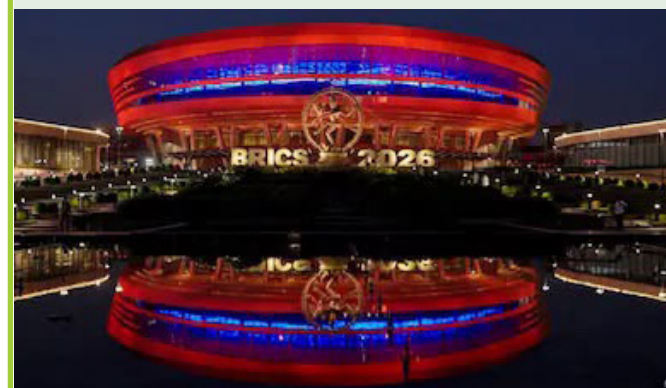

The main convention centre draws inspiration from the shape of a conch shell, representing consciousness, energy and an auspicious beginning. Its architecture incorporates themes from Indian civilisation, including solar energy, the journey from zero to the Indian Space Research Organisation and the five elements of nature, known as panch mahabhuta.

Bharat Mandapam's summit facilities are designed to accommodate large international delegations. Hall No. 1 has hosted the Bharat Innovates programme showcasing technologies ranging from drones to emerging technologies.

Hall No. 14 will host the BRICS Business Forum, bringing together industrialists, investors and corporate representatives. Prime Minister Narendra Modi and President Putin are also scheduled to address the business community.

The International Media Centre in Hall No. 5 is expected to host around 1,200 to 1,400 journalists from across the world. It will serve as the main base for global media coverage of the summit. The BRICS discussions are expected to cover the Russia Ukraine war, tensions in the Middle East, counter terrorism, artificial intelligence and trade relations among member countries.

'Goa First' takes shape as AAP, GFP explore third-front alliance possible electoral understanding. AAP and GFP, meanwhile, are understood to be examining whether a separate coalition of regional and non-Congress political forces can provide voters with another choice in the 2027 polls.

The possibility has gained traction following increased coordination between AAP and GFP legislators on issues inside the Goa Legislative Assembly as well as outside it. Their recent political exchanges have fuelled speculation that the cooperation could eventually translate into an electoral pact.

Third or fourth front will make no difference to BJP, says Damu Naik grassroots network would withstand any new political formation ahead of the 2027 Assembly elections. Referring to the rise and decline of various political parties, including the Trinamool Congress (TMC), he said the BJP had continued to retain its strength despite such developments.

“Mumbai Turns to the Sea”: ₹4,007 Crore Desalination Plant to Boost City’s Water Supply

■ Manori project aims to produce up to 400 MLD of drinking water as Mumbai faces a growing gap between demand and supply

Team Goemkarponn

MUMBAI: Mumbai is turning to seawater to strengthen its drinking water supply as demand continues to rise and the city remains heavily dependent on rainfall to replenish its reservoirs.

By 2029, the city is expected to receive up to 400 million litres of drinking water every day from a major desalination project at Manori in northwestern Mumbai. Once fully operational, the facility is expected to become India’s largest desalination plant by capacity and make Mumbai only the second Indian city after Chennai to produce drinking water from seawater on such a scale. The idea gained serious attention after Mumbai’s severe water shortage in 2009, when daily water cuts highlighted the city’s dependence on the monsoon. The Brihanmumbai Municipal Corporation is now developing the project at an estimated cost of ₹4,007 crore. The Manori plant will cover around 12 acres. The first phase is planned to produce 200 MLD, with the second phase expected to eventually take the total capacity to 400 MLD.

Xi left Beijing on Saturday at Modi’s invitation to attend the BRICS Summit being held in New Delhi on September 12 and 13.

His visit comes as India and China continue efforts to stabilise ties following years of tensions triggered by the 2020 Galwan Valley clash. A meeting between Modi and Xi is scheduled for Saturday evening.

The two leaders have met in each of the past two years, including discussions in Kazan and Tianjin, as diplomatic engagement between the two countries has gradually increased.

China has signalled that it wants to strengthen communication with India while managing differences between the two neighbours. Beijing has said both countries should approach their relationship from a long term and strategic perspective, increase cooperation and address disagreements appropriately.

The visit carries significance as it comes after a period of strained India China relations.

Team Goemkarponn

NEW DELHI: Prime Minister Narendra Modi has stressed the need for secure maritime routes and safe passage for seafarers, linking the safety of global shipping networks to the growth of international trade.

Addressing the BRICS Business Forum in New Delhi, Modi said global trade could progress only when sea lanes remain
